

Literacy

Literacy in the Early Years includes talking about books, print in the environment, early mark-making and writing, as well as sharing books and reading. Literacy in the Early Years is particularly important for our children as it gives them a head start in learning essential life skills that they will use on a daily basis, as well as preparing them for when they begin school.

Introducing Literacy in our setting is not only confined to the printed ink on a page. Sharing books, listening to stories and singing nursery rhymes can all spark communication and Literacy learning. These activities promote ideas and questions that create the foundation for developing reading and writing skills.

CRC Article 28: All children have the right to learn.